Ingrained in Tradition

Indian sweets are not just made for consumption, but they also are prepared for cultural purposes. A sweet is considered a token of love and respect and hence it is offered to Gods, guests who drop in and exchanged as gifts in weddings and festivals. For centuries, a handful of mithais like Laddus, Balushashi, Panjiri, Khaja and Shakarpara topped the list of sweets that were exchanged during celebrations, owing to their longer shelf life. But with time, they became obsolete, at least for those looking for more sophisticated options. Chocolate, although easier to make, could never compete with mithai, considering its lack of cultural validation.
